AMUSEMENTS.

"A NORMANDY WEDDING."

This is what the Louisville Commercial of last Tuesday said of the Grace Cameron Opera Company, which will be seen at the Grand to-night. After reading this excellent notice can you afford to miss this show. Get your seats reserved at Borland's:

"AT M'CAULEY'S."

"A Normandy Wedding" without Grace Cameron would be like plum pudding minus the plums, but with this dainty little piece of womanhood as the chief constellation of the show, it is with a delicious concoction, with a most palatable sauce of excellence poured all over. Grace Cameron is a goodly part of the opera, but she's decidedly an agreeable part—one that local theatre patrons can't fail to welcome—one they won't forget with the coming of the morrow. It has been several moons since they have had the opportunity of seeing so capable and clever a comedienne as this Miss Cameron, who comes to our city with a reputation, but one not a whit exaggerated or misplaced. Dainty, delicate and altogether charming, she was greeted with continued outbursts of appreciation last night. She is so chic, so aggressive, so irresistibly self-assertive that she winds herself gradually but certainly into the favor of her auditors. In the first act she did not give much promise of doing the startling; with the second section of the opera, however, she began to grow on the folk who had deposited their pelf to see her, until finally in the third and last scene she captivated the entire house with the singing of the catchy song, "She Read the New York Papers Every Day." After this she was pronounced par excellent and a welcome visitor in our midst.

Aside from Miss Cameron the remainder of the company is well up to the standard. The chorus is unusually pretty, and the only fault to be found with this bevy of beauty is that it appears too seldom to lend satiety to hungering Louisville, which is indeed desirous of at least once more seeing a presentable looking lot of girls before the footlights.

The music is probably the newest and most tuneful heard hereabouts for some few days. It is of the kind that jumps into immediate popularity. It has a swing and finesse truly artistic.

The comedy of the opera is good, many funny and absurd situations being afforded. Its lyrics and dialogue are bright and original. One thing particularly noteworthy is the precision and terseness of the plot. It is not of the rambling kind one is wont to see in the opera world, but is clear and clean cut.

CHAS. H. YALE'S "EVERLASTING DEVIL'S AUCTION"

When Chas. H. Yale originally produced his famous spectacle, the "Devil's Auction," it was called "The Devil's Auction, or 'The Golden Branch." After a few years Manager Yale christened it "The New Devil's Auction." A few more and it was known as "The Newer Devil's Auction." Then came "The Newest Devil's Auction." Then "Forever Devil's Auction." Then again "The Forever and Ever Devil's Auction," and finally upon reaching the 20th edition it became "The Everlasting Devil's Auction," and as it remains "Everlasting" upon this its 21st edition, it seems if Manager Yale has reached the limit of its titles. At the Grand, in this city, next Monday night.

HUGE COAL COMBINE.

Will Be the Strongest Bituminous Concern in the World.

The New Companies Have Assets of $120,000,000 and the Coal Output Is Close to 30,000,000 Tons a Year.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 29.—Negotiations are under way for a merging of the Pittsburg Coal Co. and the Monongahela River Consolidated Coal and Coke Co., with their combined authorized capitalization of $110,000,000 and assets of $120,088,581. Consolidation of these interests will launch by far the strongest bituminous concern in the world. The combined coal output of the two concerns is close to 30,000,000 tons a year. The plan is to make the Pittsburg Co. lessee and the purpose to economize operations.

Successful termination of the deal will end the trade rivalry which has existed between the two companies, either under or on the surface.

The negotiations which are now on to bring the two big interests together are understood to be between two men, Presidents Francis L. Robbins, of the Pittsburg Coal Co., and Col. J. B. Finley, of the River Co.

The tentative plan is to merge the two companies and at the same time eliminate one of the seemingly fundamental principles of such moves, which is the issuance of a new and increased lot of watered stock to more than cover the combined losses of the constituents. While the Pittsburg Co. will probably become the investor interest, there is no present purpose to issue new stock of the Pittsburg Co. to take over that of the river company. Anything like a stock watering deal is to be eliminated.

The total assets of the Pittsburg Co. are figured at $76,276,769, and those of the river company at $43,811,812.

A FLEET OF BIG STEAMERS.

They Are to Be Built for the United States Steel Corporation.

Chicago, Oct. 29.—A fleet of the biggest steamers on the great lakes, whose total cost will exceed $10,000,000, is to be built for the United States steel corporation. The steamers will all be of the following dimensions: Keel, 550 feet; beam, 58 feet; depth of hold, 30 feet. On a mean draft of 18 feet of water they will carry 9,000 tons. It is believed the new boats can carry iron ore from the head of Lake Superior to the furnace docks of the Erie and Lake Michigan at less than 50 cents per ton. At present the rates are 75 and 80 cents.

A CENTURY OF PEACE.

Adm. Beresford Advocates Closer Union With the United States.

London, Oct. 29.—In a speech delivered Tuesday night at West Bromwich, Staffordshire, Vice Adm. Lord Charles Beresford, M. P., expressed the belief that Great Britain was entering upon a century of peace. He advocated a closer union between Great Britain and the United States and declared that the International Mercantile Marine Co. was not a monopoly and that it would prove more favorable to England than to America.

TEN WERE HURT.

Fierce Fight Between Farmers and a Gang of Telegraph Linemen.

Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 29.—The sheriff of Monroe county with five deputies was called to Mumford Tuesday to quell a fight between farmers and a gang of telegraph linemen.

The telegraph men set poles in the center of a side path. The superintendent of side paths ordered them to desist and was maltreated. The farmers took a hand and fierce encounters followed in which ten farmers were hurt. Thirty-three linemen were subsequently arrested.

AN EXCITING RACE.

Sheriff on One Side and Marshal and Physician on the Other.

Valparaiso, Ind., Oct. 29.—An exciting race between Sheriff Lacount of Porter county, upon one side and City Marshal Billings, of Valparaiso, and Dr. J. C. Sharpe, of Jacksonville, Ill., upon the other, with the liberty of a young woman the stake, set this city wild Tuesday afternoon. The objective point was the Pennsylvania depot and upon the result of the contest hinged the freedom of Miss Stella Sophie Teller, cousin of United States Senator Henry M. Teller, of Colorado.

Miss Teller, after some family trouble concerning certain property, was placed a half year ago in a private insane asylum at Jacksonville, Ill. She escaped from that institution three months ago and came to this place, where she has quietly resided since her escape. Recently she engaged legal counsel and prepared to file a suit for $50,000 against one of her brothers for her asylum experience. This step revealed her whereabouts and Dr. Sharpe, of the Jacksonville institution, came to take her back. Arriving here Dr. Sharpe enlisted the services of City Marshal Billings and went direct to the hotel where she was staying, placed her in a back and started post haste for the Pennsylvania depot. Her attorneys were apprised of the sudden turn of affairs and hurried to the depot with a blank habeas corpus writ, arriving two minutes before the train pulled in. The writ was signed, a notary public happening to be a passenger on the train, affixed his seal, Circuit Judge McMahon hastened to grant the necessary order and Sheriff Lacount by a remarkable burst of speed caught Dr. Sharpe and his unwilling protege as the train started to pull out of the station. The Jacksonville physician was compelled to release his former patient. The affair created intense excitement here.

SUBTERRANEAN NOISES.

Strange Phenomenon in the Southern Portion of Mexico.

Mexico City, Oct. 29.—The latest news from the southern part of the republic is that the people are less alarmed over the shower of ashes than when the sun was obscured. In some places rain has come and cleared the atmosphere. Subterranean noises are heard at Tuxtla and this phenomenon appears to be general in the district where ashes fell. There were up to Saturday 45 distinct shocks of earthquake at San Cristobal. Palenque advises that no change can be observed from there in the shape of San Juan mountain, but loud and prolonged explosions are frequent. Ashes fell all day Monday.

Scientific men in Tabasco say the force required to precipitate such an immense quantity of ashes over so extensive a territory would be equal to 300,000 horse power.

The Indians say that the mountain called Huistepac is in eruption, but this is not confirmed.

CHOLERA IN PEKING.

American Soldiers Only Foreigners Who Have Escaped the Epidemic.

Washington, Oct. 29.—Surgeon Gen. O'Reilly has received a report from Lieut. W. J. L. Lyster, of the medical department who is attached to the United States legation guard at Peking, China, from which it appears that the American soldiers are the only foreigners who have escaped the epidemic of cholera up to date.

POSTAL STATISTICS.

Annual Report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Total Number of Post Offices 75,924, of Which 220 Are First Class, 1,023 Second Class, 3,488 Third and 71,195 Fourth.

Washington, Oct. 30.—A total of 2,370 presidential postmasters were appointed last year according to the annual report of J. L. Bristow, fourth assistant postmaster general, issued Wednesday. This is the largest number appointed in any one year in the history of the postal service. The increase was due mainly to the expiration of commissions during the year and the advance of many fourth class offices of the presidential grade. The total number of appointments of postmasters of all classes was 16,970, an increase of 1,313. There was a slight increase in the number of removals of postmasters "for cause" as a result of a more strict discipline for carelessness and irregularities. There were 3,038 post offices established and 4,059 discontinued, the latter attributable mostly to the extension of the rural free delivery service and the consolidation of post offices adjacent to large presidential offices. The number of post offices in the United States June 30 was 75,924, of which 220 were first class, 1,023 second class, 3,488 third class and 71,195 fourth class.

The report shows that burglaries of post offices and the robberies of mail boxes are on the increase. There were 1,746 robberies of post offices, 11 robberies of mail trains, 16 of mail messengers, star route carriers and wagons and 465 of letter boxes.

Of the total of 1,121 persons arrested for violating postal laws, 304 were connected with the postal service, including 112 postmasters.

LONG SEARCH ENDED.

Prof. Wills Locates His Missing Children in An Orphans Home.

St. Louis, Oct. 30.—After a search that has extended over three states and lasted for nearly three years, Henry M. Wills, a professor at the National university, Washington, D. C., has located his two little daughters in the Methodist orphans' home here. Prof. Wills applied for a writ of habeas corpus asking that the children be restored to him.

In 1899 the parents were divorced and the mother took the little girls to Tennessee from their former home in Indiana. Wills claims he filed an application in the circuit court of Gibson county, Tennessee, asking for the custody of the children, but that they were removed from the state. In the meantime Mrs. Wills had remarried in Kentucky. Last August the two children were placed in the home here and the father learned of their whereabouts only a few days ago. Judge Fisher, of the circuit court, granted the application for the writ of habeas corpus.

THE STEEPLE CHASE.

McManus Fell and Broke His Back and Had to Be Destroyed.

Cincinnati, Oct. 30.—The first steeple chase of the meeting was decided at Latonia Wednesday, and from a spectacular standpoint of view produced a fine contest. Fourteen horses started and ten of them finished without an accident. The four others fell at various jumps and McManus, one of the betting choices, broke his back from a fall and had to be destroyed.

Crest won in clever fashion. Mose Goldblatt, who was ruled off at Buffalo, has been restored to good standing by the Eastern Jockey club.

PRESIDENT'S SOUTHERN TRIP.

He May Travel Through a Part of the South Next Month.

Washington, Oct. 30.—President Roosevelt will make a trip through a part of the south next month if official business should not make his presence in Washington necessary at that time. The trip will be made about the middle of the month, the primary object of it being to enable the president to attend the reception to be tendered by the citizens of Memphis to Gen. Luke E. Wright, vice governor of the Philippines. Subsequently it is expected that the president will accept an invitation to participate in a bear hunt in the canebrakes of Mississippi. He may embrace the opportunity while in the south to visit the Tuskegee institute at Tuskegee, Ala., of which Booker T. Washington is president.

RACING AT MEMPHIS.

Two World's Records Were Reduced and Another One Tied.

Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 30.—Two world's records were reduced and another tied at Wednesday's meeting of the Memphis Trotting association. The first special event was the attempt of Direct Hal and Prince Direct to pace a mile as a team against the record of 2:08 1/4. The pair were driven by the veteran Geers and when the time, 2:05 1/4, was hung out the crowd gave the stars an ovation. The first quarter was paced in :32 1/2, the half in 1:04 and the three quarter pole was passed in 1:34 1/4.

Orward Silver next appeared to beat his previous two mile trotting record of 2:28 1/2. Driven by Hudson, the horse made a gallant effort, but he could only tie his former mark.

The bay stallion Nervola was sent against 4:25 1/2, the pacing record for stallions at two miles. The driver handled his horse well and at the end a full second was chipped off the old figures.

CONFIDENCE GAME.

A Missouri Man Expected to Meet a "Rich and Lovely Woman."

Chicago, Oct. 30.—Expecting to meet a "rich and lovely woman" who wanted a kind husband" John Valentine Kaiser came from Festus, Mo., to Chicago Wednesday. He had been corresponding with the "rich and lovely" whose name was supposed to be Mary Martin, and says he had paid $6 to secure an introduction. When he went to the address given by Mary, 299 Wells street, he discovered a saloon.

Kaiser told of his troubles at police headquarters and the result was a search of the premises in Wells street and the arrest of Jacob Strosser, who was found in the basement of the saloon writing letters which the police say were similar to those received by Kaiser and signed Mary Martin.

"We honor and respect our presidents, Roosevelt and Mitchell."

After the parade a big mass meeting was held at Y. M. C. A. park. The first speaker was Rev. J. F. Powers, of Spring Valley, Ill. He said he had known John Mitchell since boyhood and he always found him noble and upright. He was delighted, he said, to see the great tribute paid him by the hard coal miners.

President Haggerty, of Reynoldsburg, Pa., eulogized Mitchell for his great work in behalf of the miners. Several addresses in foreign languages then followed.

President Mitchell was the last speaker. He said in part.

"Langauge is inadequate to express the gratitude I feel for the great reception I have received at the hands of the anthracite miners and I feel that the victory is not due to myself, but to the men, women and children who made so many sacrifices. I hope that there will never again be a strike in the coal fields of Pennsylvania."

Shamokin, Pa., Oct. 30.—Mitchell day was observed here Wednesday. Seven thousand United Mine Workers, headed by the Tenth regiment band and troops, paraded the streets, after which the mine workers were addressed by several labor leaders. No collieries were in operation and all business was generally suspended.

President Mitchell was the last speaker. He said in part.

"Langauge is inadequate to express the gratitude I feel for the great reception I have received at the hands of the anthracite miners and I feel that the victory is not due to myself, but to the men, women and children who made so many sacrifices. I hope that there will never again be a strike in the coal fields of Pennsylvania."

Washington, Oct. 30.—The new executive offices of the white house are practically ready for occupancy and the official quarters of the president will be removed early next week from the temporary white house on Jackson place to the new buildings

Job was instinctively drawn near to watch what happened. Presently the door was opened cautiously, and an elderly man with a white beard, shading a lamp with one hand, appeared in the doorway. He appeared to be surprised to see his visitor, for he uttered an exclamation that was hardly expressive of welcome. The other, without a word, slipped into the hall, and the door closed noiselessly behind him.

"Henslow is up to his old tricks again," muttered Job Hendricks. "He still receives people by night on the sly. I wonder who that fellow was? It seems to me that his figure was familiar. Bah! What difference does it make. I have something more important on hand than the lawyer's visitors. It will keep him occupied for a while, so matters could not have arranged themselves better for me."

On the side of the house was a small gate, which evidently communicated with the rest of the building, and Job, after a moment's thought, pushed this open and entered a narrow path that led along the walls of the house.

As he made his way slowly and cautiously along, he became aware of a strange humming sound, as if some one was crooning a lullaby. The moon had now risen, and, as he reached the back of the house, he saw a slender, womanish figure seated under a tree in the garden. He passed her unobserved, his feet making no noise on the grass. Then he stood for a moment contemplating the girlish figure. It was her singing that he had heard as he came along. She sat there, her face resting on one arm, which was flung about a lower branch of the tree, looking very sad in her black dress, which accentuated the pallor of her face.

Job did not move, his eyes fixed yearningly on the white features, while his lips moved, though not a sound came from them. Many minutes he stood there motionless, as if he could not look enough at the girl before him.

Though he made no sound or betrayed any more life than the trees in the garden, she seemed to learn instinctively that she was not alone, and, turning, rose with an exclamation.

"Who are you—what do you want?"

As she spoke she advanced a few paces toward him in the moonlight. She did not betray any fear at seeing a strange man in the garden at night.

Job sighed, as if he had really expected a different greeting.

"Don't be alarmed, young lady," she replied hoarsely. "I am only desirous of being of service to you."

"Who are you?" moved in spite of herself by the deep feeling he put in his simple speech.

"A friend—that is all. I bring you a message—"

"From Dick?" eagerly.

"The same."

"Let me have it," holding out her hand.

Job, fumbling in his coat for the note, she stamped her foot like a spoilt child, and exclaimed:

"How clumsy you are—can't you see you stupid man, that I am burning with impatience?"

He finally drew forth the letter and handed it to her with trembling fingers.

Having seized it, she paid no further attention to him, but ran over to the porch of the house, where a lantern, burning dimly, hung from one of the pillars.

Job watched her while she read the lines, her pale face transfixed.

"How she does seem to love the poor fellow," he murmured, with a certain longing in his voice, as if speaking of one of whom he was envious. "It must be a satisfaction to be loved like that."

It did not take her long to read the message, and then, thrusting it in the bosom of her dress, she returned to the man who stood waiting, eying her with an air of uneasy interest.

"I don't know who you are," she began.

"It don't matter," he added humbly.

"But you are a friend of Dick's, and therefore, a friend of mine," said she, holding out her hand. He took it in his great, rough paw, and held it so long that finally, with a quick gesture, she drew it away, regarding him curiously.

"Why, my poor man, you are weeping," she said.

Job dashed his hand across his eyes and laughed nervously.

"Me, ma'am; well, that would be curious, wouldn't it?" Then, after a pause, as if trying to collect himself: "You see, I had a daughter once. Had she lived she would just have been about your age. That's why it makes me feel kind of upset."

"Was it long ago you lost her?" she asked, with genuine sympathy in her voice.

"Many years, my child, many years." Then, as if wishing to change the subject which had become painful to him: "I hope that note brought you in the means of cheering you up. You have troubles of your own—"

"The deepest trouble that can fall on a daughter," with a catch in her voice, "to lose my mother—and then that Dick should be accused. But they can't—they won't do anything to harm him—will they?" seizing Job's arm eagerly.

"No—no, of course not," he said slowly.

"How doubtfully you say that," pettishly. "But when he is innocent."

"We shall get him off, no doubt, but it will take time. You see they pretend to have a great deal of evidence against the lad, and that counts for a great deal in a court of law. But there?"—as he saw that Dick should be accused. But they can't—they won't do anything to harm him—will they?"

"You are very kind, and I thank you in advance. We have need of every friend we can muster in this hour of trial," and she held out her hand again, frankly, while Job raised it to his lips.

"Now you will see Dick again?"

"If it is possible—and perhaps I shall have as much luck as I had today," and he told her of his experience.

"Oh, there is so much to tell him that I should never know how to begin. But I am sure this separation cannot last long. Papa, I'm confident, believes in his innocence, and if he has done nothing as yet it is because he has been too prostrated by this terrible affair to be able to think clearly."

"I believe—I am sure—that your father will do what he can for the school-teacher," replied Job, earnestly. "Don't be discouraged, my dear, for the law, you know, moves slowly, and it will take some time to get him freed."

"Then as he glanced up at the house and saw a light in one of the windows, he said: "But it is time I was going, miss. For certain reasons, I don't fancy meeting with Mr. Henslow or any of the rest of the people."

"But you haven't told me your name yet."

"No, sure enough, I haven't."

"I should like to know the name of one who has been so kind to us."

"It don't matter much, miss, what an old piece of driftwood like me is called," he stammered.

"Still, I should like to know."

"Well, it's Job Hendricks."

"I never heard Dick mention that name before."

"Probably not, since we never met until to-day."

She looked at him in such a puzzled way that he smiled.

"Just set me down as one who wishes you young people well, and will do all that lies in his power to see you safely through this trouble."

He fixed her eyes on him for a moment wistfully, and then, with some hesitation, as if asking a favor:

"I would like to write him a long letter, but it would take some time. There is so much that I want to say to him—"

"Then you need not write; there is a way direct and generally better," exclaimed a voice so near them that they both started.

"Dick! you here?" exclaimed the young girl, as the school-teacher stepped out of the shadows.

"Yes, the real article," as he drew her toward him and kissed her.

"There's nothing ghostly about that, is there?" and he held her out arms' length with both hands, smiling as if the shadows of the bars had never separated them.

"Come, you don't seem glad to see me!" as she did not speak.

"Glad? That is a faint word to use. But it all seems so strange that you should be here."

"Strange, but true."

"Then they have set you free?"

"No such luck. I freed myself. I could not rest satisfied with sending you a message, when only a few bars stood between me and freedom; so I kicked them out, and here I am. Let us make the most of the opportunity, for it may not occur again."

He paused a moment, and looked around wistfully; then said: "But we were talking with a man when I came up. Who is he? Where has he gone?"

Job Hendricks had taken advantage of the meeting to slip away in the dark.

CHAPTER IX.

THE PRISONER DECIDES TO RETURN.

Job had left the scene. Hidden from view, he was a delighted watcher of the meeting of the two young people. He seemed to take almost a parental pleasure in witnessing the tender demonstrations of feelings between the lovers, though he had discreetly withdrawn to a distance, where he could not hear what they said to each other. "He seems to be a worthy young man, and she loves him; that is plain and evident," was the thought that ran through his mind. "Such being the case, they can count on my help to make the path of true love run smooth."

He stood in deep thought, making plans for the future. The two young people had drawn away from the house, and now, seated under the big tree, were talking in a low voice.

Job took advantage of their preoccupation to slip away to the path by which he had entered the garden. Since the young man had escaped, it would be well that some one should be on guard, for perhaps the burly constable might come in quest of him, and, stupid as the fellow seemed to be, it would be Henslow's house that he would seek for his prisoner.

The young man's sudden appearance had rather disarranged Job's plans, and it was necessary that he should rearrange them to meet the exigencies of the case.

His meditations were disturbed by hearing his name uttered in a low voice, just as he was passing one of the low windows of the house. The shutters were fastened, but a pale light filtered through the slats. He stopped for a moment, rubbing his nose thoughtfully. "Am I a subject of talk already in this town?" he muttered. "Guess I'll have to look into this. When you're brought up for discussion, Job, it may mean trouble."

He looked at the window, the sill of which was almost on a level with his head, for a moment, and then, reaching out his hands, drew himself up with ease, so that he could look directly into the room. There was no place on the ledge for anything but his fingers, yet, owing to the dimness of the light which came from a lamp burning on a table in the center. As his eyes became accustomed to the surroundings he gradually made out that there were two men seated near the table, one facing him and one in a big armchair with his back to the world.

When for a moment one of the men leaned forward and he caught a glimpse of a white beard, he knew it was Henslow; as for the other, only the top of his head was visible. The latter was no doubt the person he had seen slipping into the house in such a surreptitious manner.

"I shouldn't wonder if the fellow was an imposter," Henslow was saying, "and I should treat him as such."

"Listeners hear no good of themselves. I think the rule will hold good in this case," Job said to himself, having no doubt that he was the subject of the discussion.

What the lawyer's visitor said he could only make out in part, since the latter spoke in such a low voice.

He could distinguish such fragments of sentences as "almost threatened," "seemed sure of his ground," "knew the whole affair."

Henslow was silent for a moment, and took a sip from a glass of wine at his elbow.

"You need have no fear that the visitor was Martin Frale, for he is dead," he said, at length.

"Sure of that?"

"Had it from the prison authorities themselves."

"Then who is this man?" The other raised his voice, and spoke in a more animated way.

Henslow shrugged his shoulders.

"I wish I was able to tell you, because I am glad to do Ellison any service. Must be a fellow-convict to whom Frale communicated the story before he died. No doubt he wants to trade on the information."

"That's likely enough, but he must have the documents in the case to speak so boldly."

"That may all be mere bravado."

"And he would take no money."

"That is a poser. Didn't want any money?"

"Not a cent, even when it was offered to him."

"That astonishes me—what can the fellow's object be?"

"I'm afraid we shall have to wait and find out," muttered the man with his back to the window.

"And he made no declaration of what he intended to do?" asked the lawyer, after a moment's pause.

"No, nothing of the kind, except that he seems to be interested in the young school-teacher."

"Know him?"

"Says he never saw him but once in his life, but he wants him to be free for some reason or another. Urged Jim to do all he could, and threatened things if he did not."

"That man, whoever he is, will bear watching," was Henslow's comment as he resorted to his glass again.

A chuckle came from the chair where the other was seated.

"Bless you, we don't intend to lose sight of the chap while he is in the neighborhood."

Job clung to the window, still smiling quietly to himself.

"Then I wasn't wrong in thinking that I was being watched."

He had no chance to hear anything further of what was being said in the room, for the visitor had risen and now moved to the door. The two men stood there for a moment in deep conversation, but though he listened intently, Job could not catch a word of what was being said.

He dropped to the ground from his uncomfortable position, for he was anxious if possible to catch a sight of the visitor when he came out.

With this intention he slipped around to the front of the house and in the shadow waited.

Presently the door opened quietly, a man popped out, his hat pulled down over his eyes so that the eager watcher had no opportunity to get a good glimpse of his face. Then the man stepped into the middle of the road, looked about him for a moment, and set off at a brisk pace down the street.

Job Hendricks had just seen him disappear among the shadows when from the other direction a man suddenly appeared, running and out of breath.

He was a portly individual, and as he came up to where Job was standing the latter recognized him as the fat constable he had seen that day haranguing the people before his house.

"Now we are in for it," muttered he to himself. "Here is the law in search of the prisoner."

The fat man drew up with a gulp and a gasp and mopped his red face wildly with his handkerchief.

"You seem to be excited, friend," said Job, soothingly.

"Excited? Well, I guess I be." Then, looking Hendricks over from head to foot: "I'm the town constable, and I'm lookin' for a man who has been a hoss and a drifter. I'm a constable, and I'm lookin' for a man who has been a hoss and a drifter. I'm a constable, and I'm lookin' for a man who has been a hoss and a drifter

APPLES are to be plentiful, and doubtless cheap. The crop this year is enormous, as borne out by the figures, which estimates it at 43,000,000 barrels, against 27,000,000 barrels in 1901. The exportation, however, is reported as three times as heavy as last season.

YESTERDAY's dispatches tell of a young man killed in Indiana while laying foot ball and a young lady killed in Simpson county, Kentucky, while playing croquet. It can not be argued from this that the latter is as dangerous a game as the former, which is a continual menace to life and limb. The growing wonder is that the fatalities from foot ball are not more frequent. WHAT CAN YOU DO?

That's what the world is asking you.
Not who you are,
Nor what you are;
But this one thing the world demands,
What can you do with brain or hands?

What can you do? That is the test
The world requires; as for the rest,
It matters not;
Or who, or what
You may have been, or high or low
The world cares not one whit to know.

What can you do? What can you do?
That's what the world keeps asking you
With a trim one,
And that alone!

Ah, soul, if you would win, then you
Must show the world what you can do!
Once show the world what you can do,
And it will quickly honor you
And call you great;
Or soon or late,
Before success can come to you,
The world must know what you can do!

Up, then, O soul, and do your best!
Meet like a man the world's great test,
What can you do?
Gentle or Jew,
No matter what you are, or who,
Be brave and show what you can do!

WINTA
THE SIOUX MAIDEN
BY EDWARD B. CLARK.

"WELL, yes, if you want it," said a group of interested listeners. "I'll tell you a story. I went last night to see the play where the Indian girl falls in love with a young officer and by her heroism saves the garrison. You've seen the play?"

"Yes," his hearers assented.

"Well then I'll tell you a story something like that in the play. It was just after the Kearney massacre, that is we whitewashed it a massacre, but as many Indians had been killed as there were soldiers it would have been nothing but a fight, and I say this though I have been a regular for more than 30 years. The whole country up toward what afterward was the Custer battlefield was filled with Sioux. There were old Red Cloud, he was comparatively young Red Cloud then, American Horse, and some others, all big chiefs and bad, who were on the war path with bands of young bucks, and they were burning and lifting hair whenever they got a chance.

"I was a duty sergeant in the Eleventh cavalry at the time serving with T' troop. With 'B' troop we had been following the trail of a bunch of reds, near the Grand river. We struck 'em unexpectedly and killed some eight or ten and lost four men ourselves. The rest of the band scattered and got away, but we made a queer capture. No Indian on the war path ever takes a squaw along with him, that is, if he's regularly on the war path, but that bunch had along with 'em the prettiest Sioux girl anyone ever laid eyes on. Indian girls ain't pretty anyway, but this one was, and you have my word for it. She wasn't more than 18 years old. A lot of our men spoke the Sioux lingo and we got her story. Her name was Winta, and she was the daughter of a Sioux chief. She had gone down Grand river way on a visit to a Sioux village that was peaceful like. Her father was a tough old warrior who hated the whites, and he was now up near the Black Hills.

"Winta said she had become homesick and that this roving band of Sioux coming along and being headed for her father's headquarters, she had asked them to take her home. Being a big chief's daughter, the braves had done as she requested.

"This was along in October and the weather was getting sharp. 'B' and 'I' had orders to go into winter quarters up Black Hills way. We knew we had to get there pretty soon and prepare things for a long, hard time of it. We didn't know what to do with the girl. We couldn't leave her, and so we took her along.

"We had a young second lieutenant with us. He was a good-looking fellow, but if I must say it he had considerable conceit. That's neither here nor there, however. Winta, the Sioux girl, was as modest a creature as any prairie flower that ever grew. She took a shine, however, to the West Point youngster, and he was mighty attentive to her, though all in a fair and square way. You can bet the old major commanding our squadron wouldn't have had it any other way, for, you see, a woman under the protection of a bunch of soldiers is safe, be she red, white or yellow. Blake, that was the youngster's name, used to ride alongside of Winta, and he saw to it that she got the best bits of buffalo meat that the carcass afforded. She used to hang her head on one side and look at him just the way you've seen many a white girl look. They're all alike, these women.

"Well, we got up near the Black Hills some time early in November, and it was getting colder than sin. The old major looked about for a suitable place for our winter camp and found it under the shelter of some bluffs, with plenty of water close at hand. Our position was all right except that we were pretty badly open on one side, in case of attack, but as a matter of fact we didn't think much of that because there were sixty odd of us and we thought we were good for all the Sioux and northern Cheyennes that were likely to come. We had the Indian girl, Winta, with us yet, and the major gave her a tent by herself.

She was sweeter than sweet still on the youngster Blake; that is, her eyes would follow him round, and she always smiled when he spoke to her, something she wouldn't do for anyone else in the outfit, though she was always polite and nice enough, Sioux fashion.

"We were running short of meat and the major sent out a hunting party into the hills with a lot of pack horses. They were gone ten days and they came back with enough grub to last us all winter, but they had a bit of news that we didn't like. They told us that not more than 15 miles off, where two creeks came together, there was a huge encampment of Indians, evidently settled for the winter. They had counted the tepee poles by the aid of glasses and figured that there must be at least 3,000 Indians in the village, which meant a fighting strength of about 800 men.

"A soldier's willin' to fight, but he can't fight long with odds of fourteen to one against him. We didn't care about going to attack the reds, and we were mighty well content if they wouldn't come to attack us.

"When Winta, the Indian girl, heard about the village she said that it was her father's, but that he had changed his place since she last had seen him. For three weeks now Winta had been billing and cooing with young Blake, and they certainly were sweet on each other. The fellows were bettering ever, though such things don't happen often, that Blake would make her go back to civilization with him and that there they would be spiced up. They were two regular turtle doves.

"The day after we heard of the Indian village Winta went to the major, got down on her knees in front of him, and prayed she might be allowed to go to her father's village. The major understood Sioux. He'd been up against the devils often enough to be able to write a dictionary of their lingo.

"'Why, Winta,' he said, 'if you go back, they'll know that somebody must have brought you most of the way, and they'll be down on us like a whirlwind.'

"I'm putting the girl's talk into straight English. She said that the reason she wanted to go was to keep her father and his men from attacking us. 'I am his only child,' she said, 'and he can't refuse me anything. I'll tell him of your goodness to me and his heart will be soft. Some of the warriors will find that you are here when they're in search of game, and then you will be attacked and killed.'

"It was about this time that young Blake came up. The girl turned a face full of love toward him. Blake blushed a little and said to the major: 'I guess Winta knows what she's about and I think she can keep these fellows quiet until spring, when we'll have some kind of a chance at them.'

"We fellows all said to one another: 'The girl's goin' to her father to keep him from getting after us just for the sake of the youngster. She don't care a rap for all our kindness, but she does just dote on Blake.'

"Well, the upshot of it was that the major let the girl go. It was only a matter of 15 miles, and she had the

HUGE ENCAMPMENT OF INDIANS.

DICTATES OF FASHION.

Some of the Pretty Details of Dress in Vogue for the Autumn and Early Winter.

Among the new and stylish outdoor bodices the Siberian blouse is most effective, says the Chicago Daily News.

A popular color is the deeply splashed purple grackle blue. This very dark (fairly black in some lights) blue is so rich that in the different shadings it reveals tinges of plum, purple and even a dull green with vivid suggestions.

A new ulster for shooting is of checked Scotch goods in red and deep blue. The high collar is of velvet. The triple capes and triple cuffs are smartly stitched. The buttons are of simple bone. The hat which goes with this is of white felt trimmed with blue ribbon and red and blue wigs.

The newest thing out, to replace the feather boa is a broad stole-like shoulder covering of white or mixed black and white ostrich feather tips, wide enough to turn the point of the shoulder and long enough to reach nearly to the knee. These are outrageously expensive but very becoming and quite new.

Don't imagine the modish indigo bird stands for indigo blue pure and simple. Not so. The color is not the real thing unless to its richness is added a shading of the light brilliant green which most of us are familiar with in peacock feathers. This indigo bird combination is most perfectly reproduced in the heavy new changeable taffetas, the splendid deep blue predominating, the light metallic green gleaming from the depths in certain lights.

Low-cut Louis XV. coats are to form one of the features of autumn and winter wedding and reception gowns. They will be made of peau de soie, satin duchesse and lustrous Muscovite silk, as well as of matelasse silk and satin brocade. The models reach at least 14 inches below the waist line, and the Corday bertha, or Marie Antoinette fiche, which completes them is of real lace. The coat is lined with either white Liberty satin or mauve moire. The sleeves are in open flowing style, showing rich-looking undersleeves that match the elegant blouses to be worn beneath these coats, some of these being of creped chiffon with costly venise lace appliques, or else of embroidered white silk batiste daintily lined with soft pink mouseline de sole—the beautiful rose tint below them showing the devices to marked advantage.

Boas naturally are for street wear, but fashion has graciously provided for home wear the loveliest fichus and fancy collars to take their places. One style has a scarf two yards long and ten inches wide, the whole made of white net, and the ends are applied with Irish point. This is brought around the neck twice and tied in a bow in front. Another has a flat sailor collar of black net with white applique on it, and at the joining there is a white net scarf two yards long tied in one bow, the ends reaching the knees, where they finish with a ruffle of the net, with a lace ruffle at the bottom of this. Still another is a ten-inch scarf of dotted white net, with narrow valenciennes at each edge and crossing the ends several times. This is still longer than the others and goes twice around the neck and ties, the ends falling below the knees.

THE PIANO TUNER.

He Had Done Work on the Instrument Before, But It Was in a Different House.

A lady stepped into a piano warehouse recently to engage a tuner, but before doing so insisted upon the strongest assurance that the tune was responsible. She was so determined that the manager became curious to know the reason for her disbelief in the reliability of tuners, says the Philadelphia Musician. She gave her experience with the last tuner she had, and this is the story as she told it:

He had about finished tuning the piano, when he looked up and said:

"Your instrument was in awful condition. You ought to have sent for me sooner."

"It was tuned only three months ago."

"Then the man who did it certainly didn't know his business."

"No,"

"No, ma'am. He had better be doing street-cleaning than tuning pianos. Why, my dear madam, a delicate instrument like a piano needs fingers equally delicate to handle it, combined with an ear of uncanny accuracy. The individual who attempted to tune this instrument last evidently possessed neither of these. In fact, I am free to say he did it more harm than good."

"Indeed?"

"Indeed he did. May I ask who it was who so abused your instrument?"

"It was myself!"

"Madam, you are wrong; I never tuned a piano in this house before."

"Probably not; but you tuned that instrument, nevertheless, or made a botch of it in attempting to do so. It belongs to Mrs. Jones, who sent it here while she is out of town. She told me you always had tuned it, and to send for you when—"

"The girl looked him in the eye. 'Because I hate you and all whites,' she said."

"Well, sergeant," broke in one of his auditors, "that ain't like stage stories. In them the Indian girl always saves her soldier lover."

"I know it," said the sergeant, "but if you'll show me a play with a soldier or an Indian in it that's anything like real life I'll show you six white black birds."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Quarreling.

In most quarrels there is a fault on both sides. A quarrel may be compared to a spark, which may be produced without a flint as well as a steel, either of them may hammer on wood forever, no fire will follow.—Philadelphia Press.

Not Qualified.

"No, sir," said the man in the mackintosh. "I know too much to allow myself ever to get caught on a jury."

"How do you manage it?" asked the man who had his feet on the table.

"Did I just tell you? I know too much."—Chicago Tribune.

ABOUT LIVING IN FLATS.

The Question as to Its Demoralizing Effect on People and Its Proper Answer.

The flat dwellers, as a class, have worried the social philosopher a good deal. The scheme of daily existence which they have adopted is a great change from that according to which the American people lived for 200 or 300 years, says Harper's Weekly. When a family occupy a whole house among other whole houses, they may be said to live with their sign out and their flag flying. The conditions under which people live thus housed and surrounded are an equivalent of the French etat civil, though we do not formally require our citizens to live under that sort of official certificate of identity and respectability. The American flat dweller is subject neither to the official inquisition nor to the fierce light that beats on the detached villa. Nobody observes his comings and goings. He is in most respects the freest man in the world, the only tyrant to which he is subjected being the janitor's hard-heated denial of steam heat just when steam heat is most desperately needed, and the tendency of the people in the flat above to tramp about at the very moment when one is trying to get to sleep. These are material, not moral, forms of pressure. The flat dweller is free, socially alone, under no neighborhood superintendence. He is hidden from all the earth.

What is the result? Has anyone discovered that the life is essentially demoralizing? Unless some one is able to supply evidence not now at hand to prove that it is, we shall have to conclude that the fact that the domestic virtues continue to flourish among our present immense population of American flat dwellers is just so much new support for our national theory that the citizen does not need the attendance of a policeman or detective to make him good. Publicity may be desirable for corporations, since they have no souls. It is not especially necessary for the free and well-taught citizen, because he has a soul, and his soul regulates his body the better for being subject to no earthly supervision but his own. Or, at any rate, it does so unless we are running our country entirely on the wrong basis—and we do not think we are.

PATENT RIGHTS IN FAR EAST.

The Status of Inventors as Regarded by the Governments of the Occidental Countries.

Nothing better illustrates the difference between occidental and oriental civilization than the manner in which inventions are regarded by the respective governments, says the New York Post.

In the west the inventor is honored and his invention is protected by letters patent, copyrights and trademarks, while no attention is bestowed upon those who are thrown out of employment through the invention itself.

An Ideal Woman's Medicine.

So says Mrs. Josie Irwin, of 325 So. College St., Nashville, Tenn., of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Never in the history of medicine has the demand for one particular remedy for female diseases equalled that attained by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and never during the lifetime of this wonderful medicine has the demand for it been so great as it is to-day.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and throughout the length and breadth of this great continent come the glad tidings of woman's sufferings relieved by it, and thousands upon thousands of letters are pouring in from grateful women saying that it will and positively does cure the worst forms of female complaints.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all women who are puzzled about their health to write her at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Such correspondence is seen by women only, and no charge is made.

CONSUMPTION

FOR THE LAUNDRY.

A Variety of Information Regarding the Proper Way to Wash Certain Articles.

Most housekeepers, and all up-to-date ones, are owners of good-washing machines. These labor-saving devices are instrumental in removing most of the terrors of wash day and leaving in their place the satisfaction of having the work quickly and easily done. Fine laundry work such as washing the more delicate white fabrics and laces may be accomplished by running through the double run-board washer, more satisfactorily than washing by hand. The water should be very hot and all stains removed before placing in the machine. Use good white soap and if the water is hard, common washing soda to soften it. The latter should not be used to excess, however, as it injures the fibers and takes away the snowy whiteness so desirable in these fabrics. Borax, though more expensive, is powerful detergent which does not injure the finest lace or daintiest lawn, says the Home Magazine.

A good washing fluid for the common articles of the wash is made by shaving one pound soap into two quarts boiling water. Add one pound soda and allow the mixture to remain on the stove until the ingredients are dissolved. After removing from the fire add one gill of turpentine or kerosene and mix thoroughly. Use a pint of the fluid to each three gallons of water. Rinse thoroughly and air the clothes for some time after drying to remove the odor of the oil.

During cold weather starched clothes should be hung in the attic or an unheated room to prevent freezing to such an extent as to injure the starch. A little gum arabic dissolved in hot water and added to the starch will give it luster and durability. For collars and cuffs, cold starch dissolved in tepid water with the addition of a few drops of kerosene and a small amount of gum arabic solution will not only render them of the desirable stiffness and gloss but will also keep them clean and bright much longer than if laundered by the ordinary method.

HOW TO BURN SOFT COAL.

Items of Information on a Subject That Is of Interest to Most Housekeepers.

William S. Essick, secretary of the Reading (Pa.) stove works, states that in view of the fact that there has been so many inquiries as to the use of soft coal, and coke as a substitute for anthracite coal, he had secured all the information that he thought was sufficient to assure people that coke or soft coal can be burned successfully, says the Coal Trade Journal.

"When a fire is started with bituminous coal in the ordinary cooking stove, all the dampers must be open. The coal will then kindle quickly. Put the coal on in small quantities or the fire will be smothered. Keep the fire box pretty well filled and free from ashes.

"In a range be careful in starting a fire not to fill the fire box too full, as the bituminous coal will swell or expand and raise the lids. Coke can be burned in precisely the same manner.

"In fixing the fires for the night in a stove or heater observe the following rules:

(1) Have a good strong fire.
(2) Put on fresh coal.
(3) Let the draft on long enough to burn off the gas. This requires but a few minutes.

(4) Close all the dampers, or, in other words, take off all the draft.

"In the morning stir up the fire well with a poker, put on the draft and a good, quick fire will soon be secured.

"The smoke pipe in a range should not be less than six or seven inches in diameter. When less than that the fire is apt to be sluggish.

"The flues, smokepipes and chimneys must be cleaned from time to time, and the soot removed. The accumulation of soot in a stove or heater where soft coal is used is much greater than when anthracite is used.

"Experiments have shown," said Mr. Essick, "that soft coal can be used as successfully as anthracite, and at a less cost."

Fairy Gingerbread.

Beat one cupful of butter to a cream, add two cupfuls of granulated sugar gradually, one teaspoonful of ginger, one cupful of milk, in which one level teaspoonful of soda has been dissolved, then beat in four cupfuls of sifted flour; turn baking pans upside down and wipe the bottoms very clean, butter them and spread the mixture very thin on them; bake in a moderate oven until brown; while hot, cut in squares and slip from the pans; keep in a tin box.—Home Magazine.

Ripe Pears with Cream.

This is a delicious breakfast dish and a pleasant change served with good brown bread and butter for the fruit and cereal course. The pears must be mellow, ripe and of fine flavor. Pare and slice them thin and sprinkle lightly with powdered sugar. Have them chilled and when cold heap whipped cream on top of each dish.—Washington Star.

To Remove Fruit Stains.

Never sprinkle salt over wine and fruit stains on table linen. It does no good and is messy. The stains may be removed by pouring hot water through them before the linen goes into the soap suds.—N. Y. Post.

His Vacation.

Singleton—I say, Wederly, did you take a vacation this summer?

Wederly—Well, I guess so. My wife stayed in the country six weeks.—Chicago Daily News.

St. Jacobs Oil.

In cases where bronchitis has become chronic from want of proper treatment in the earlier stages, there is nothing so good as Dr. August Koening's Hamburg Breast Tea, in conjunction with which I strongly advised the use of St. Jacobs Oil as an outward application, along the front of the throat, from close up under the chin to well down to the top of the chest; the one remedy assists the other, and, as intended, they work in complete unison. The wonderful penetrating power of St. Jacobs Oil enables it to reach the adhesion of foreign matter which lines the bronchial tubes and which makes breathing more and more difficult. As these adhesions become inflamed and enlarged, St. Jacobs Oil causes such adhesion to break away, making expectoration easier and more free. Dr. August Koening's Hamburg Breast Tea, drunk slowly and very hot, soothes and heals the parts, is comforting and quieting, stops the cough and relieves the breathing. This manner of treatment (and there is no other two remedies that will work together so successfully) reaches the difficulty from the outside and the inside at the same time. St. Jacobs Oil reaches the roots of the adhesion, and assists Dr. August Koening's Hamburg Breast Tea in clearing them; then both remedies act in unison in healing and curing. The above remarks apply with equal force in cases of asthma, croup, whooping cough, enlarged tonsils, and bronchial affections, except, of course, should the Jacobs Oil and Dr. August Koening's Hamburg Breast Tea always in the house in order that they may be promptly used in the first stages. Often the maladies develop with wonderful rapidity, and complications take place with equal suddenness.

Careful:

"There's one friend I advise about you," said the frank friend. "You carved out your own fortune, and yet you never brag about being a self-made man."

"No," answered Mr. Meekton. "I shouldn't think of suggesting that Henrietta wasn't entitled to all the credit."—Washington Star.

"Well," remarked the optimist, "opportunity knocks once at every door." "Yes, there's something very feminine about opportunity," replied the pessimist. "She makes her call when she's pretty sure you're out, and that's the end of it."—Philadelphia Press.

Secure.—"You say that you have made a success of politics?" "Yes." "Are you an orator?" "No, sir. I'm the leader of a brass band. The musicians always get the money, but the orators are expected to talk for nothing."—Washington Star.

Resolutions of Respect.

The following resolutions of respect, were adopted by Paris Lodge, No. 873, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at their meeting held on Tuesday night:

James Connor died in Lexington, Ky., on Sunday, October 19, 1902.

For several years he was a resident of Paris, and during that time became a member of Paris Lodge No. 873, B. P. O. E. was a member in good standing at the time of his death.

He was a man of standing in the community, generous and true to his friends, devoted to his family, and attentive to his duties as a member of this order, and his death has brought sorrow to our lodge.

Therefore Be It Resolved, That in our brother's death this community has suffered the loss of a good citizen; his family a loving father and devoted husband, and this lodge a member conscientious in the observance of the principles and objects of the order.

2. That we tender to our deceased brother's family our sympathy in their time of sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our brother, and published in the County Papers, and that a page or our minutes be devoted to his memory.

MARKED BY A CROSS.—In his charge to the grand jury, called to investigate the murder of A. B. Chin, at Lexington, Circuit Judge Parker, said:

"If every spot where a man has fallen by the hands of violence were marked by a cross, Lexington would resemble a city of the dead as much as a city of the living."

MINES ON MOUNTAIN TOPS.

Nothing in engineering is more romantic or curious than the fashion in which the ordinary conception of a mine as an opening penetrating far below the ordinary level is reversed where inducements offer to climb high above the earth's surface before piercing into it.

There is, for instance, the Eureka gold mine, probably the highest in the world, situated 14,000 feet up in the Andes range, not far from the city of Jujuy, in Argentina. So high is this mine that it is only worked with great difficulty owing to the "mountain sickness" and to similar troubles to which workers at this immense altitude, almost three miles in the air, are subject.

Near Chocaya, in Bolivia, there is the Veta del Cuadro mine, where silver ore is extracted 13,000 feet above sea level, while the same metal is wrought near Peopo, in the Cordilleras, 12,400 feet above tide water. The produce from all these is carried on mule back over tremendous mountain paths to points where it can be placed on rail or be concentrated into more portable form for further transit by wagon to the seaboard.—Stray Stories.

COOL GARDEN SPOTS.

A glacier when it dislodges itself and sails away over the Arctic ocean never travels alone. In the wake of every large one floats a line of smaller companions.

The Eskimos call this phenomenon "the duck and ducklings," and any one who has watched the progress of the elder duck followed by her brood will appreciate the aptitude of the name.

Strange as it may seem, plants grow and blossom upon these great ice mountains. When a glacier is at rest, moss attaches itself to it, protecting the ice beneath, just as sawdust does. After a time the moss decays and forms a soil, in which the seeds of buttercups and dandelions, brought by the wind, take root and flourish.

Those who have traveled in arctic lands say they have found no point yet where the poppy does not bloom during the brief northern summer.

THE SKIN.

Bathing to many persons is a term embodying an expenditure of time and considerable trouble. It is probably because they do not cleanse the skin until it gives visible signs of its needs. Now, the skin is everlastingly throwing off impurities which you cannot always see with the naked eye, but which will be readily found in the appearance of the bath water even when one bathes each day. When you can wear a white collar a few hours without marring its spotlessness where it comes in contact with the skin, you may have some excuse for thinking that you are perfectly clean and not before. The neatest person I ever saw could not boast of such an achievement, for the thing is well nigh impossible. Nature has provided the pores for drainage purposes, and in health they work without ceasing.—Boston Traveler.

THE SINGING MOUSE.

The power of song among the brute creation has so long been associated in our minds with the feathered tribe alone that we do not think of it as belonging to any four footed animals. Yet there is a mouse that sings—why, nobody knows. It is a small animal, with very large ears, which are moved about much while singing, as if that were necessary to the success of the vocal performance. The song is not, as you think, a prolonged squeak with variations, but a succession of clear, warbling notes, with trills, not unlike the song of a canary, and quite as beautiful, though some of the notes are much lower. One great peculiarity is a sort of double song, an air with an accompaniment quite subdued. Upon first hearing this one believes that he is listening to more than one mouse, so perfect is the illusion.

THE LOUIS STYLES.

It was the French King Louis XI. who invented gold lace, and it was Louis XIV. who ordered all the silk upholsteries of the palace done in white with figures of gold and blue and a touch of red. The Louis silks are named after him, and all the French kings of the name of Louis have had their names brought down to posterity through the invention of some article of dress, whether it be a Louis Quinze heel or a Louis Seize coat, while to Louis Quatorze belongs the honor of a cuff and a hat.

A GENIUS.

Small Son—I know what I'll be when I grow up—I'm going to be a great inventor.

Papa—That's encouraging, certainly. What makes you think you have inventive genius?

Small Son—Why, I wanted to take a screw out and I couldn't find a screwdriver, so I unscrewed it with your razor.—Short Stories.

A WONDER.

An advertisement was inserted for some one to take charge of the choir and play the organ at a village church. The following was among the replies: "Sir—I noticed your advertisement for an organist and music teacher, either lady or gentleman. Having been both for several years, I offer you my services."

MUCH IN A NAME.

Being informed that he was to be taken before a judge whose name was Justice, a Georgia negro exclaimed:

"De goodness in gracious! Ef he gimme what his name call fer, I sho' is gone!"—Atlanta Constitution.

A word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain. It is a seed which, even when dropped by chance, springs up a flower.
